

PARK BOARD PLAYED BY WOODWARD FOR QUESTING DAN CAREY

"Pack of Yelping Hyenas and Dirty Politicians" Caused J. O. Cochran's Election as Park Manager, He Says

WOULD BE FIRST TO SIGN PETITION FOR THEIR RECALL

Buchanan Slated to Succeed Cochran, Puckett to Succeed Buchanan and James to Succeed Puckett

Mayor James G. Woodward denounced as a pack of yelping hyenas and dirty politicians the members of the park board who elected J. O. Cochran as its manager.

He stated that he would be the first to sign a petition for their recall.

"I am high time," the mayor says, "that the people take their business out of the hands of these dirty politicians, who disgrace the name of politics, and who are a real peril to the city."

One of the "delinquents" of the board, Woodward declared, was J. L. Mayhew, who was elected to the position of city investigator, made vacant by the resignation of J. L. Mayhew.

With the resignation of J. L. Mayhew, the position of city investigator was filled by J. L. Mayhew, who was elected to the position of city investigator, made vacant by the resignation of J. L. Mayhew.

Many past matters were held over for the city hall Saturday and it developed that the mayor's failure to present the matter at a meeting, eliminated from the running the dark horse of the race, Alderman W. A. Armstrong.

Mr. Armstrong declared that he had a sufficient number of votes to elect him. But there was no second round.

Cochran on Jan. 1, 1915, took possession of the office of the general manager of parks. He announced that he could recommend the election of J. O. Cochran as the person to succeed him.

Only the placards of presidents of the various clubs, and the former manager, Mr. Cochran, were returned by Mr. Cochran.

"I will think it over," was the answer of Mr. Cochran to the offer of the park board to elect him.

When the vote was taken Mayor Woodward left the room, after receiving that he was to be recalled.

Naval Men Suffer And Go Mad, But Keep Mouths Shut

Herbert Corey Describes Horrors of Life on a Destroyer—No Word Comes to Waiting Wives of Absent Officers

By HERBERT COREY.
(Copyright, 1915, by Herbert Corey.)
LONDON, Dec. 31.—Five retired officers sat in one of the service clubs the other day. Each had a son in the navy. Four of them admitted they did not have the most romantic view of the navy—this idea where their sons might be.

"I know where my son is," said he. "I got a letter from him last week. He said he was a bit down on his watch on duty."

Maybe it wasn't a term. Perhaps it was some other sort of sorrow. That doesn't matter. The whole purpose of this narrative is to call attention to one of the most romantic achievements of the British navy during the present war.

It has individually and collectively kept its mouth shut. Nothing has leaked from the British ships to the enemy's dockyards. There isn't a man in England, outside of the admiralty offices, who knows where any given ship was yesterday or is today, or will be tomorrow. Wonderful things have occurred. There have been tragedies and acts of incredible heroism, and days upon days of grim endurance. And the navy has kept its mouth shut.

"You see," said the retired officer, "my son and I are amateur ornithologists. We spent his last leave in the north sea studying bird life. He can't write me, of course, where his ship has been. The censor would not let him tell me. But when he tells me that for a week past he has been watching seals fly over the ship, I know where he is as well as though he had given the place to me."

That is the only kind of information from the British ships that comes to the public. And that isn't enough to hurt the Admiralty was tormented off London by the news of the capture of the island of Heligoland. All English know the name of the island, but because of the censor's rule, the length of the island by word of mouth. One man wrote to a friend not long ago:

"Send me the American papers containing the story of the capture of the Audacious. My son was on the board here. I know he is safe, because he has been in the line of duty. I know he is safe, because he has been in the line of duty. I know he is safe, because he has been in the line of duty."

THINK WERE HUNTER.
In consequence of this excessive cold, the English believe that the British ships are being hunted by the enemy's submarines. No one knows where the British ships are, or how many ships are in the line of duty.

"The ship was going in a suspicious manner," the retired officer said. "The ship was going in a suspicious manner. The ship was going in a suspicious manner. The ship was going in a suspicious manner."

Nothing else. People worried over it for awhile, and then forgot it. With the British ships being hunted by the enemy's submarines, the British ships are being hunted by the enemy's submarines.

Only the placards of presidents of the various clubs, and the former manager, Mr. Cochran, were returned by Mr. Cochran.

"I will think it over," was the answer of Mr. Cochran to the offer of the park board to elect him.

STANDARD OIL STEAMERS SEIZED BY GREAT BRITAIN

Brindilla Again Taken Into Custody Off Scotland Coast. Cushing Captured Also, but Is Released

QUESTION OF REGISTRY INVOLVED IN SEIZURE

On First Detention of Brindilla British Government Appeared Satisfied As to Her Registration

By Associated Press.
HALIFAX, N. S. Jan. 2.—Word was received here today that the American tank steamer Brindilla, whose arrest by a British cruiser and detention at Halifax last October was the cause of diplomatic correspondence between the United States and Great Britain, resulting in the steamer's release, again had been intercepted by the British navy.

The British navy, it was reported, had intercepted the steamer on December 31, 1914, and took her into custody off the coast of Scotland and taken into Halifax.

Starting records show the Brindilla was captured on December 31, 1914, at St. Michael's, Norway, on a cargo of oil from the German steamer on December 31, 1914, and was taken into custody off the coast of Scotland and taken into Halifax.

The state department made representations to the British government, which resulted in the Brindilla's release. The British government, it was reported, had intercepted the steamer on December 31, 1914, and took her into custody off the coast of Scotland and taken into Halifax.

Nothing else. People worried over it for awhile, and then forgot it. With the British ships being hunted by the enemy's submarines, the British ships are being hunted by the enemy's submarines.

Monday Is the Day of What We May Term "The Ideal" January Sale of Muslin Underwear

With Thousands of Garments Prettier By Far Than the Same Prices Brought in Former Seasons, This Sale Offers Wonderful Opportunities

We would like very much to put this advertisement in the form of a certified document.

We've some facts, some big fine facts to tell that we have not been able to tell before. And the facts have money value for those who take them in and act.

We say this is the Ideal January White Sale. It is, to an extent we've never attained.

Greater Varieties Neater Workmanship
Finer Materials More Attractive Styles
Daintier Laces and Embroideries Lower Prices

These are the component parts that make the sale what we claim for it.

How it was all managed and brought to the state of completeness that you will find Monday is the story of the building of a big merchandise event that dates back into the very early fall. It was then that we got the first taste of the kind of January Sale we could hold this year--and we liked it.

Several makers were suffering from a severe case of "waritis."

The eloquence of a good big order swayed their prices. This was the start--a sort of "feeler" so to speak.

Then we went ahead. Other stores, it seemed, were not going into the January White Sale with the same determination, the clouds of depression were heavy. So much the more reason for us to do a really bigger and finer thing than ever! We will pass over the intervening months of preparation. Now for the accumulative effect of all our efforts.

Here's the sale!

The Ideal Sale in the Fine History of Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Company White Sales. We ask women to see with their own eyes what the prices below stand for, to feel with their own fingers what the materials really are, to compare in their own minds the styles, then they will appreciate what a genuine service such a sale is to a community.

The Infinite Variety In This Ideal Sale

It must impress a woman.

The hundreds of different garments.

If she does not like this one, here is one she will like. If this gown has not enough lace on it, here is one that seems all lace. If this corset cover has no peplum here is one that has. Choose, choose, choose, the garments that one likes best.

The varieties are far greater than in any January Sale. Perhaps because things were so much prettier we could not resist them—but bother with the because, the fact remains there are greater numbers of most attractive garments for the women of Atlanta.

Given---a Firm Resolution To Economize

Let's see how we should look upon such a sale as this.

In the first place, the very bigness of our purchases brought prices down. Again, we cannot recall the time that we bought muslin underwear under quite such favorable conditions.

The market was right for the merchant with confidence in his public and in his own ability to dispose of large quantities of worthy merchandise.

We bought to splendid advantage.

And now so may you.

It is distinctly a time to save by spending.

Things you will need cost less right now.

The Note of Daintiness That Distinguishes This Sale

Like a soft, sweet motif of a beautiful piece of music, the note of daintiness pervades this sale.

We see it in the inexpensive garments, we see it in the most elaborate—womanly daintiness in materials, in laces, in embroideries, in ribbons, in workmanship—the seams are felled, the buttonholes are even, the pearl buttons without blemish.

What woman can resist daintiness in muslin underwear?—and women know the usual cost of daintiness. It is acquired by painstaking care and exactness.

That is one of the things that is going to impress women with the fact that things are inexpensive here.

This is Not a Sale of---

Cheap muslin underwear. It is anything but that. It is not even wholly a sale of inexpensive muslin underwear. Unusual attention has been given to the higher priced garments, the finer things, for the good reason that unusual savings were possible.

All of which should be a source of satisfaction to women who require such garments, in spite of the fact that so many stores seem to have forgotten it.
